From AOL CityGuide

In the heart of Hollywood lies this chic yet affordable spot, where a T-shirt and jeans are just as welcome as hip couture. Step into bar area's white facade with black leather seating, and you may feel like the place is a bit icy. But a few steps further into the split level space takes you into the cozy dining room of leather banquettes, black square tables and soft lighting against gold-embossed wallpaper -- putting it somewhere between modern lounge and classy bistro. The menu maintains a similar dedication to pleasing all: Options ranging from grilled ham and swiss to grilled pork chop with sweet potato mash are inventive yet simple, and tasty yet affordable (sandwiches and entrees average at $10-15). The best part: You can have it all late-night (they serve only a slightly altered menu). Magnolia's beet salad, ahi tartare and steak and eggs Benedict are sleeker alternatives to after-hours greasy spoons. -- C. Lee
